Full details are unknown in reopening; representatives will be available on Sunday

Chicago, IL - Members of the popular Cheetah Gym chain may not have to find a new workout center after-all. ChicagoPride.com has learned the Cheetah Gym Bucktown and Andersonville locations will reopen this Sunday under new management.

This surprise announcement comes just days after David Wilshire announced he was closing the Cheetah Gym chain due to "employee theft." On Wednesday, Wilshire abruptly closed all Cheetah locations claiming employees skimmed more than $1 million over several years. (Full Story)

Representatives at Cheetah Gym confirm Cheetah Gym is back in business with the Bucktown and Andersonville locations reopening under new management this Sunday, September 9th and plans to open the Edgewater location on Wednesday, September 12.

According to a Cheetah Gym employee, David Wilshire will no longer be operating the popular gyms and employees will be paid.

Management will be available Sunday from 7 a.m. - 9 p.m. at the Andersonville and Bucktown locations to answer member questions.
