You know you're a star when you can make an entire episode of reality TV and never once have your name mentioned.

On tonight's episode of Bravo's Make Me a Supermodel, Britney Spears causes some serious drama—but she doesn't pop up. They don't even mention her name.

It all begins when series contestant Perry Ullmann gets a cryptic phone call from his live in girlfriend Amanda Pagel.

"You need to listen to me," she urges. Just so happens the National Enquirer broke a story this week suggesting Pagel was the other woman in Spears' relationship with pap Adnan Ghalib.

"There is a huge story about me that has blown up in the media, and I just want you to know that it's not true and that you heard it from me first," she goes on. "Unfortunately, you will be affected by this."

But that's all she'll say, despite Ullmann's prodding—in fact, a rep for the show says the model probably still hasn't heard what's going on. He and the other contestants have been sequestered in a New York apartment since early January.

In other words, if Ullmann makes it to the show's finale, that's three more weeks before he learns he just took center stage in one of Hollywood's never ending dramas.
